Now and then a picture would rise before him, a picture that persisted while she was in fitting rooms. And would frown and glance nervously at his watch, at the low dropping sun outside the windows. For he saw a shambles of a mess hall, broken crockery, a mess of vile food and grumpy men. Every thought in their heads had been thoughts which he himself had felt; every move they made earned his sympathy. For he knew as only the self-made man can know the fellows he has passed, but still remains with.

Five-thirty. He frowned heavily. Was it pos-

Five-thirty. He frowned heavily. Was it pos-

JULIA PERSUADES PAYNE TO NEGLECT HIS DUTY.

He loved to appear before him, more beautiful than ever woman was before in all the world. It seemed, with the child-like desire to please, to be radiant in order that she might make proud the heart of the man she was to marry.

And once as he looked at his watch, to his strained, guilty ear came a sharp report, the report of a revolver. He started and moved swiftly toward Julia, placing his arm commandingly upon her wrist. She turned the withery of her glance upon him and for just an instant, the suspicion of a frown puckered her brow. It cleared instantly then, with an exquisite, little whimper she came very close to him, looking up into his face with the perplexed and worried expression of a child.

"I'm simply famished," she exclaimed. "Surely you won't permit me to starve, Leo. Just a mouthful and then we can—"

"Hungry?" He started as she voiced his thought of the unappeased hunger of those men he had visualized throughout the afternoon. "No, really, Julia—"

She had his arm in her two, tiny hands. Ineffable hands they seemed, dainty and blue veined and almond-tipped at the fingers. And yet, like bands of steel, they drew him despite himself, despite everything within himself that cried out aloud against their pressure.

Ira Monroe settled back in his office chair, idly staring at the hands of the big clock. He had gone over the books for the first time in a week, had listened to Pat Grady's story of the fracas that had come so near ending fatally. And as the old man's eyes closed, slowly, very slowly his mind traveled from the fields to his home in Los Angeles.

A faint smile hovered about his lips as he thought of his petted daughter, of the fearful consequences that might have occurred from her remissness in writing concerning the food supply out here. It seemed incredible that such a slight, fragile little thing could be the storm center about which such things revolved. And yet he was dubious whether even when he told of the affair, when he described the danger her sweetheart had been in, and account of it, when he pointed out to her the place in the room where the bullet had lodged—he doubted whether even such a tale would be sufficient to cure her of the incorrigible habit she had of procrastination.

Two—three—four o'clock and still the hands traveled along their way. At five o'clock, the old man rose and stared anxiously out upon the road balance to the credit of several thousand savings depositors is $20 higher than a year ago.

The uncertain conditions of the past year and the great demands for unusual charitable contributions have brought home to a great many of our citizens the thought of economy as never before.

A firm of investment bankers of New York, in an effort to get a correct idea of the present financial situation, asked 2,000 lenders of business throughout the country a number of questions, including this one: "Are people generally disposed to economize?" If so, is this economy caused by reduced earnings or increased thriftiness? Stricter economy is general, said 485 of the answers—of necessity, said 485 of them.

The New York superintendent of banks reports savings deposits on January 1st almost $30,000,000 in excess of those of a year previous, with 27,000 additional depositors.

This is not the first time that it has been demonstrated that savings bank deposits grow larger and capital accumulates faster during periods of depression than during the flush times, when employment is abundant and wages are high.

It is simply human nature to act in this way. But those who want to win a permanent financial success must overcome this tendency to drift along the line of least resistance.

Let them get the taste for saving and it will breed in them both the desire and the ability to create permanent resources, in other words, to become money-makers.

EAGLES CHANGE BOUNDARY LINE

Salt Lake, June 15.—Consummation of the proposed reorganization of the tri-state aerie, Fraternal Order of Eagles, was effected yesterday afternoon after an animated discussion, but by a majority that promptly made the decision unanimous.

What was formerly the tri-state aerie will now be known as the intermountain district aerie, F. O. E., and instead of comprising all of the states of Utah, Idaho and Nevada, will now include all of the aeries of Utah, of Lincoln, White Pine and Elko counties in Nevada and all of that portion of Idaho south of the forty-fifth parallel.

More than 75 per cent of the delegates representing the tri-state convention favored the change, the consensus of opinion being that the new plan would make for both economy and solidarity in the fraternal work of the organization.

The tri-state convention opened yesterday morning at 10 o'clock, with President Max Davidson of Ogden in the chair. M. M. Beaver, president of the Salt Lake aerie, delivered an earnest and pointed address of welcome, and the response of President Davidson was an earnest of the fact that the convention had many important matters to consider, as well as various treats of entertainment in store for the delegates.

The following committee appointments were announced: Credentials—Beaver, Salt Lake; Hull, Pocatello, Idaho; Thomas, Ogden; Shoer, Mackay, Idaho; Barger, Bingham.

Legislation—Peters, Jerome, Idaho; Walker, Ely, Nev.; McCann, Salt Lake; Huppert, Mackay, Idaho; Gass, Idaho Falls.

Finance—Geiger, Ogden; Beaver, Salt Lake; Dr. Orem, Idaho Falls; Gallagher, Murray; Quinn, Tooele.

Ways and means—Bernstein, Salt Lake; Bullock, Pocatello, Idaho; Aspern, Bingham Canyon; Thompson, Mackay, Idaho; Bab, Salt Lake.

Distribution—Smith, Salt Lake; Adamson, Eureka, Hughes, Eureka; Glenn, Tooele; Jenkins.

Special publicity committee—Baker, Salt Lake; Thomas, Ogden; Bennett, Ely, Nev.

The meetings of the committees began early and lasted until nearly 5 o'clock. The consolidation resolution was the main topic of discussion for several hours and the debate was earnest and interesting. At the time of adjournment Secretary E. Eliot of Pocatello announced the result with evident satisfaction.

Asepsis Practiced by Physicians and Nurses Insures Them of Contracting Disease—Few Health Hints—To Wash the Babe's Woolens—Delicious Perfume—Shortcakes for Early Summer.

THE PERSONAL TOUCH.

By Wm. Brady, M. D.

Why do doctors and nurses, whose duties bring them so much in contact with contagious disease, not become infected more frequently than non-professional persons? Have they a secret charm or method of escaping contagion? Well, they have a very good method, but there is no secret about it. Every one is welcome to know, and urged to know all about it.

You may have observed the precautions the modern surgeon takes in managing a wound. He gets all "set up" if the uninitiated layman carelessly touches anything—even if the layman has nice clean hands. You'd think the surgeon considered himself the only really clean person in the house. He doesn't. He simply practices asepsis. Asepsis is to antiseptic what keeping clean is to spring housecleaning; if asepsis is practiced, antiseptic (the use of antiseptics) becomes superfluous whether injurious to the healing process or not. A hand may look clean, be neatly manicured and free from visible dirt, yet convey deadly germs to a wound. The surgeon and nurse know how to keep surgically, bacteriologically clean; which is quite a different thing from ordinary cleanliness.

Germs Are Carried by Persons. Contact with a sick person does not imply actual touch. One may treat a contagious case throughout an illness without once actually touching the individual. The doctor and nurse, through training in medical asepsis, automatically avoid actual contact; the untrained attendant ignores this principle in the care of the sick.

For instance, if saliva were a dye it would be a rare thing to see fingers unstained with the individual's own saliva or another's saliva; and there isn't a better medium for the conveyance of infectious disease than the secretions from the human mouth.

One of the world's greatest surgeons performs the most difficult operations without once touching the wound with his hands. One of the most famous sanitarians, a health officer of an American city, has practically revolutionized the practice of quarantine and contagious disease management by training doctors and nurses in perfect medical asepsis—avoiding the personal touch.

This new kind of sanitation has demonstrated in a practical and undeniable manner that fumigation and pest-houses are unnecessary and dangerous to public health.

Soap and water, elbow grease, fresh air and sunlight, plus a strict observance of medical asepsis—avoiding the actual contact which spreads disease germs—are the real and unfailing principles in modern sanitation. Biting off bad smelling smoke after a contagious disease is a very expensive and badly worn joke on the community.

Questions and Answers. Heart Misbehaves After Goitre Operation—I was operated on for goitre last June. I have gained 25 pounds, haven't an ache or pain, and look fine, writes Mrs. A. B., but my heart still bothers me considerably, though I walk a lot every day. Otherwise I am wonderfully improved. Can you advise me about the heart?

Answer—Exophthalmic goitre may leave the heart badly damaged, if treatment is too long delayed. Perhaps your heart will gradually regain its efficiency now that the toxic cause is removed. Walking is good, provided it does not exhaust you. Medical advice should be based upon examination of your heart.

WASHING WOOLENS. The wise mother washes out her baby's little woolen shirts herself. It pays, for if they go in the regular laundry they will shrink unless they are carefully washed and stretched. Always rinse woollens in water of the same temperature as that of the washing water. Never wring them out, just squeeze and shake and put on a shirt stretcher or hang so that the neck will not pull. Silk and wool keeps its shape better than wool and cotton and is warmer. A little baby can get along nicely on three shirts, washing one out each morning so that one can afford to get a good quality.

Woolen stockings should be washed quickly, wrung side out, and stretched into shape. They will shrink slightly unless put on stretchers, but they should not lose color. It is better to wash them in a suds and rub the soap only on the soles. Mending wool should be washed out in hot water before being used so that it will not shrink after being used.

Woolen caps should be washed separately and pulled into shape from time to time. While drying, a woolen sweater should dry in a heap, being gently lifted and kneaded and turned from time to time as they lie near a heater or in the sun on a Turkish towel, but never pulled or stretched in any way.

A DELICIOUS PERFUME. Another delicious perfume which adds novelty to its charm clearly shows the Russian influence. The vogue for all that is eastern is so strong at this time that it is not surprising to find it has extended to perfumes, especially when it is remembered that the Russian women are exceedingly fond of sweet odors. As a rule, however, the Russian extracts are very heavy, with a suggestion of musk, which is used so freely in the east, but this new extract is quite free from it, and is delightfully delicate and appealing.

It is encased, as one would expect, in such a chef d'oeuvre in the art of perfumery, in a triangular leather case. The bottle, of clearest crystal, is likewise triangular in shape, with an attractive cut glass stopper.

SHORTCAKES FOR EARLY SUMMER. Berry Shortcake—Strawberries, raspberries or blackberries may be used. Take one quart of flour, one-half teaspoonful of salt, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, two tablespoonfuls of butter, one pint of milk. Sift flour, salt and baking powder together, then rub in butter thoroughly and put in enough milk to make a dough easy to handle. Divide in half and roll out each part pie-size; spread butter on top and a light sprinkle of flour, and then put the two round pieces of dough together and bake on a buttered tin plate. Have ready a pint of berries picked over and well washed and sprinkle with powdered sugar and a half hour before needed. Divide the pastry without breaking the disks and put the berries between, serving the shortcake hot.

ELKS THROG EUREKA STREETS Eureka, June 15.—Eureka is all lit up tonight in honor of the Elks of Utah—that is to say, the streamers of electric lights which have been erected on the streets are shining on a gay throng of Elks and their wives, who have come here for the annual meeting of the State Elks' association.

Shortly after dawn Parley P. Christensen, president of the association, and a delegation of Provo Elks arrived by automobiles. After a conference with the local members of the order, reception committees were arranged to meet all incoming trains. By this evening there were between 400 and 500 Elks and members of their families in town, and they, together with residents of the city, are guests at a dance this evening.

During the day the delegates made a number of excursions to various points of interest around Eureka, and the several members of the various organization committees met to prepare for the formal opening of the convention tomorrow.

The first business session will be held in the morning immediately after the arrival of the special train from Salt Lake. The election of officers is scheduled for 1 o'clock, and in the afternoon there is to be a baseball game between Park City and Eureka.

At 4 o'clock the delegates will leave on an automobile tour for an inspection of the Tintic district, and in the evening there is to be a banquet and dance.

EDITOR OF MUSICAL COURIER COMING Salt Lake, June 16.—Leonard Lieb-ing, editor of the Musical Courier, is to visit Salt Lake on his return east from the meeting of the National Federation of Music Clubs in Los Angeles, according to Fred C. Graham, who says that the distinguished editor of one of the foremost music journals in America expects to be here July 7.

As soon as it became known that Mr. Lieb-ing was coming here several prominent local musicians began arranging a reception and some entertainment for him. An article is to be written for the Musical Courier, setting forth the development of music in this state.

SPRY APPOINTS EDUCATIONAL BODY Governor William Spry yesterday appointed the educational code commission created by the last legislature to undertake a revision and codification of the school laws of the state and report before the convening of the next legislature.

The act creating the commission provided that the state attorney general and the state superintendent of public instruction be ex-officio members of the commission. Accordingly the names of Attorney General A. R. Barnes and State Superintendent E. G. Gowans head the list. The other appointees are George N. Child of Salt Lake, I. L. Williamson of Eureka and Karl Hopkins. Mr. Child is supervisor of grammar grades in the Salt Lake schools and is former president of the Utah Educational association. The out-of-town members are also well known educators.

The legislature made an appropriation of $500 for clerical expenses of the commission. Its report will be the basis of bills to be presented to the next legislature unifying school laws.

ELECTRIC TERMINAL FOR SALT LAKE Salt Lake, June 16.—That Salt Lake is soon to have a modern electric line terminal station to care for the business of the Orem road and the Bamberger route was indicated yesterday by the talk of Andrew Cook, bond expert of Chicago, at the regular weekly luncheon of the Rotary club at the Hotel Utah. The terminal station will probably represent an expenditure of $1,000,000.

Interesting Facts about CRISCO

Crisco is the best, the cream of vegetable oil. Crisco is all vegetable. It remains of ideal consistency and does not separate. Crisco keeps sweet and pure indefinitely because the parts of the oil which turn rancid have been eliminated.

Crisco makes a richer cake than butter, because it is a richer fat. Crisco is 100 per cent pure fat; butter contains approximately one-fifth water, salt and curd. Crisco makes fried foods more digestible, because Crisco itself is perfectly digestible.

Crisco is a real food fat. Animal lard, and fats to which stearine has been added require a longer time to digest, taxing the digestive machinery. Try Crisco today. Grocers sell Crisco in ever increasing quantities. It costs less than half as much as butter.
